VOICE OF THE EDITOR

Looking for Meaningful Dinner Conversation? Talk to Kids about Money

It appears that talks with their children about the value of money and managing it wisely are low on the totem pole for today's parents. Data gathered from an AICPA survey shows that 81 percent of parents have such talks. While 81 percent is substantial, it pales in comparison to the 95 percent who talk to their children about good manners. Money Is Low Priority in Parent-Child Talks includes lots of tips from the National Financial Literacy Commission as well as a helpful list of online resources for parents, most of which offer fun games and activities for children.

TIP OF THE DAY

Hiring College Grads: Overused terms with little substance don't help job seekers understand what makes your job different from others. Be as specific as possible about job requirements; e.g., instead of "communication skills," describe as "must present and explain new processes to clients."
