VOICE OF THE EDITOR

Windows 8: Will You Take the Plunge?

With the advent of Windows 8, many of you will have a choice to make – will you "elect" the new operating system or stick with what you know? You'll get a kick out of today's first read by guest writer Josh Sacks. Excel expert David Ringstrom is back to explain how to "trap" errors in Excel formulas. As always, his easy-to-follow instructions will prove invaluable. If, heaven forbid, your computer crashes and all your stored data vanishes in an instant, what will you do? Michael Alter talks about data storage options you can implement to prevent such a disaster.

TECHNOLOGY HEADLINES

→ The Microsoft "Election"

Once again I'm faced with that perplexing quadrennial conundrum – whether to replace an incumbent that's served me well for the most part with a challenger that offers a radically new direction. That's right, I must decide whether to upgrade to Windows 8.

→ Trapping Errors within Excel Formulas

Sometimes a formula you craft will return an error, such as #DIV/0! or #N/A. Many users overcome this by using combinations of the IF, ISERROR, and ISNA worksheet functions. However, using these functions in concert can result in complex formulas.

→ The Dog Ate My Database

For some small companies and firms, their idea of a client database is an old filing cabinet with manila folders spilling out. Or maybe it's a series of spreadsheets. Maybe it's extremely well organized, or maybe it's a mess, but either way, there are better tools at your disposal.
