VOICE OF THE EDITOR

Stealthy Job Searching while on the Job

In a recent Accountemps survey, 73 percent of workers indicated they're likely to do their job searching for a new position while currently employed. That alone isn't a surprise – most people feel they're more employable if they still have a job. The trick, however, is to conduct the search without putting your current position at risk. Accountemps has some tips on how to get that new job while you're still employed.

What are your on-the-job interview experiences? Have you ever gotten caught sneaking out for a long lunch? Have you had to make excuses for wearing a suit to work in a casual environment? Has the boss ever intercepted a call from a headhunter? Please share your experiences and read what your colleagues have to say.

EDUCATION HEADLINES

➔ Accountemps Survey: Most Professionals Would Job Hunt while Employed

According to a recent survey from Accountemps, nearly three-quarters (73 percent) of workers polled indicated they would have no problem looking for new employment before leaving their current firm.

➔ Illinois Internship Program Provides Access, Mentorship for Minority Students

The Mary T. Washington Wylie Internship Preparation Program, created in 2012, represents the ICPAS' ongoing commitment to increase diversity in the accounting profession by providing underrepresented minority students with access and exposure to the profession.

➔ Innovation Is More Than Idea Generation

Successful innovation starts with creating a culture that has a bias toward action and rewards execution. Instead of having one small team or department tasked with innovation, it should be part of an organization's culture.
