VOICE OF THE EDITOR

Learning About Typewriters (or Maybe Pivot Tables)

Hello, it's me again. Richard and I will be trading the mic during the week just to make sure you're all paying attention. Don't worry, just about the time you're getting used to the routine, we'll change it up on you.

Anyway. Over the weekend I was playing tourist in my own state with some family. We did touristy things -- my girlfriend and I even got an Old Tyme photo taken -- wandering in and out of various shops, not buying anything. I don't need magnets or those spoons that hang in the little wooden spoon hanger thingees. I send postcards. But that's another story.

Eventually, we came across an antique store selling a beaten up Underwood typewriter for $35. All the keys were stuck, it didn't have a ribbon and it weighed 30 pounds, but with little thought -- except to talk the proprietor down $5 -- I bought it.

Now, I don't know anything about fixing up old typewriters but I have good intentions to learn something, ANYTHING about getting this typewriter to work. Plus, I have no choice. My girlfriend isn't going to let that thing just sit there and collect dust.

The point is, I'm determined to learn something new even if it seems like a colossal waste of time.

This year we've started offering various webinars so that you can learn something new, too. We hope that you have and that you'll continue getting something useful out of our offerings. And if you're not, then email us to let us know what you'd like to learn this year. We're open to all kinds of ideas. Even if they're old ideas.

Have a great Tuesday.
