Stop Screwing Up

Now that we're only visiting every other week, I suspect you've discovered a new-found appreciation for my melodic missives. I admit, writing fewer of these notes probably makes it more difficult for me to come up with something halfway interesting to say, but it does allow me to do other things...like...um, figure out how to get rid of other work (aka delegating) so I can...attend conferences?

Yes, I'll be at the Sage Summit in Las Vegas next week to hobnob and enjoy some of the best air conditioning in the country. If you plan to be there, examine the name tags of tall, nordic-looking fellows with glasses until you find me.

There's lots of great content this past week but I especially enjoyed Kristen Rampe's 16 ways to screw up delegation. There are lots of items on that list that would be easy to forget when you're trying to get rid of some of your own work. IN FACT, you're probably doing something wrong at this moment so STOP and make it your must read today. Then you'll do a better job delegating and then you can come to Las Vegas.
